

Parent-Teacher Conferences

Parent-Teacher conferences are one of the most important ways a parent can support their child's academic growth & development. The goal of a parent-teacher conference is to share information regarding your child's school successes as well as areas where he/she might need to focus more attention.

Things parents want to know...great questions for a profitable conference:

- In what areas is my child doing well? What are my child's strengths?
- In what areas is my child having difficulty?
- How does my child comprehend what he/she reads?
- How does my child do in math and other areas?
- Does my child need to work on math facts at home?
- What types of books should my child be reading at home?
- How do I know when my child has homework?
- How much help should my child need to complete homework?
- Does my child participate in class willingly? When called upon?
- Does my child demonstrate self-control?
- How does my child get along with other children?
- What can I do at home to support my child's learning?

Things parents may want to share with their child's teacher:

- How your child perceives his/her school day.
- If anything happening at home may impact your child's school performance.
- Any health-related concerns, medication changes, etc.
- Any important information regarding your child's needs.
